THE field of illustrated books is enlarging so rapidly, and the public becoming so discriminating, that the publisher has more than ever to consider quality in illustrations. Mere copies of pictures such as are produced generally by engravers of commercial work will not fill present demands. The hand and eye of the trained artist are necessary. The JAMES S. CONANT COMPANY have always made a specialty of the highest grade of halftone reproductions and take pleasure in submitting a few specimens of their recent engravings. They call attention in particular to the 200 screen reproductions, these showing more detail than possible with the 150 screen usually employed, and yet not losing brilliancy in effect. This class of art work is particularly advised where the best in quality of bookmaking is considered. This work will have the supervision of Mr. Wm. Jay Dana, whose high standing as an artist and as an engraver is well known, and it is hoped the benefit of his suggestions in matters pertaining to the selection of originals, to retouching, to the re-etching and hand engraving of halftone plates will be of material assistance to those calling upon us. Correspondence or personal interviews with publishers and others interested in the best halftone illustrations is solicited.

THE above illustration and that on the opposite page show hand engraving of halftone plates. The attention of publishers of text-books is invited to this particular manner of treatment, inasmuch as such plates will print with perfect results upon any ordinary super-calendered paper. These examples were printed in "Elementary English Composition," published by Allyn & Bacon, Boston, and are shown with their permission.
